FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

PUBLIC WI-FI AT MUSEUM OF THE MOVING IMAGE MADE POSSIBLE BY TIME WARNER CABLE

New York, March 4, 2014—Museum of the Moving Image and Time Warner Cable Inc. have partnered to offer free Wi-Fi to Museum visitors, it was announced today by Carl Goodman, the Museum's Executive Director.

"We are thrilled to be working with Time Warner Cable to provide free wireless Internet access to all Museum visitors," said Goodman. "We've found that our visitors love to record and share their Museum experience with their social networks in real time. This donation from Time Warner Cable will allow them to do so at warp speed."

In addition to the free public Wi-Fi, Time Warner Cable provides high-speed Internet access throughout the Museum for use in education programs, and for live video chats and webcasts that are part of its theater programming.

The Museum has also received grants from Time Warner Cable for its Future Lab education programs. In these semester-long after-school courses, students at the Museum's partner schools use math and science skills to create animated videos and video games.

"Through our Connect a Million Minds initiative, Time Warner Cable is proud to continue our partnership with Museum of the Moving Image and help make fun science programs available to so many kids in the area," said John Quigley, Regional Vice President of Operations, Time Warner Cable. "Connect a Million Minds is all about exposing students to science in engaging ways and we believe these programs will accomplish that and much more."
